By Hana LaRock Updated August 27, 2018 Have you ever wondered how much a professional WWE wrestler makes? Perhaps it's a career you're interested in going into or maybe you're just curious about what their salaries are. After all, some WWE wrestlers are just as famous (if not more) as many actors and singers! The most successful WWE wrestlers have made well over a million dollars, and even though the "sport" may not be as popular as it once was, wrestlers still make a nice living from the fame and fortune. A professional WWE wrestler's main job role is to entertain the viewers. Though they may certainly have some fighting experience as well as the physique they've trained hard to have, a WWE wrestler is much more of an actor or actress than anything else. That being said, it's still necessary that a WWE wrestler has experience with wrestling maneuvers before trying to make it in the industry. In order to become a professional WWE wrestler, you will need to go through training as a wrestler and an actor. There's no question that those who begin wrestling and acting from an early age will certainly have a better chance of getting in than those who don't. Though there is no official requirement, most WWE wrestlers have their high school diploma and GED, and some have a college degree as well. Most WWE wrestlers get their start at Florida Championship Wrestling, which is the official training center for those who go on to be WWE superstars. If a wrestler makes it to the WWE roster, then that means they will have signed a contract which outlines their salary, bonus, royalties, income from Pay-Per-View events and the specific terms and conditions. Some wrestlers may be signed for just one year, while others may be signed for up to 10 years. Depending on their success, they may work domestically or internationally. However, there are usually conditions in which the wrestler could have their contract terminated early. Those who become professional WWE wrestlers are signing up or a lot more than wrestling, as most WWE wrestlers can become famous overnight. WWE wrestlers make a lot of money. In fact, according to Business Insider, the highest paid male WWE wrestler, John Cena, gets paid $10 million, and others, like Brock Lesnar, get paid $6.5 million. However, on average, a WWE wrestler on the roster makes $500,000 a year, with top-wrestlers making $1 million or more a year, according to Forbes. Professional WWE wrestlers who make more do so usually because they are involved with acting jobs outside of WWE, which boosts their popularity in the WWE. When wrestlers can gain more fame through experience, showtime and other acting roles, their pay can increase tremendously. Though it's clear that anyone who can even get on the WWE roster will have a very high standard of living, it's not so easy to get into the WWE. WWE is still a popular means of entertainment, and many fans around the world love it as much as they did 10 or 20 years ago. In fact, according to Forbes, WWE events like WrestleMania do just as well, if not better, than the Superbowl when it comes to attendance and ad revenue of the host city. That being said, with the rise of wrestling organizations in other countries, as well as authentic fighting events such as the UFC, there is definitely some competition out there. But, those who are able to make the WWE (which is only a lucky few) will do very well financially. Apple was put in the spotlight this week, with iPhone news dominating the scene. Apple was put in the spotlight this week, with iPhone news dominating the scene. First, Apple supposedly lost the prototype of its next-generation iPhone, with photos emerging on both Engadget and Gizmodo. Adding fuel to speculation, Apple's lawyers asked for the device back, suggesting that it may indeed be genuine. To make things more interesting, Adobe terminated its development of the compiler, which was aimed to enable Flash apps to run on the iPhone, following Apple's recent amendment to its iPhone 4.0 SDK licence. Meanwhile, an iPhone hacker has successfully managed to install Android on Apple's smartphone. Facebook staged its F8 developer conference this week, making a number of announcements. The social networking giant introduced what it calls the Open Graph protocol, a way for users to share their activity on external sites via "likes" on their Facebook. The company is also getting rid of its Facebook Connect log-in feature in favour of the open-source OAuth. Thirdly, in a joint effort with Microsoft, they have come up with their own version of Google Docs. The product, which is currently in beta, lets Facebook users create MS documents that can then be shared with friends on Facebook. Microsoft is getting serious about web standards and has sponsored the Web Open Font Format (WOFF), bringing it closer to becoming a standard. It's unknown whether IE9 will support the technology, but it's a positive move regardless. Lastly, some good news for Linux fans. Synaptics is bringing multi-touch capabilities to a range of Linux distributions, including Fedora, Millos Linpus, Red Flag, Suse Linux Enterprise Desktop Sled 11, Ubuntu and Xandros. Posted by Lana Kovacevic Getty ImagesAn android bug that has been dubbed the "worst Android vulnerability in the mobile OS history" is back for a third time, and it will allow cyber-criminals to hack into your mobile device in less than 10 seconds. This new version of what's ominously called Stagefright tricks users into visiting a web page, via an innocent-seeming email, that infects the phone with a malicious multimedia file. Once the file is downloaded, it resets the phone and sends information about the device to the hacker. This data allows the hacker to gain sensitive information, as well as gain control of the microphone and camera to actually spy on the user. Northbit, a research firm based in Israel, said that they exploited this bug earlier this year and called it the "worst ever discovered." Confused about the way it works? Take a look at the video below for a more detailed guide. But ultimately, the same-old advice still rings true — don't click unfamiliar links. View full post on YoutubeWatch Next The first step to nabbing great seats for a WWE event is to find out when tickets go on sale. Unfortunately, there is no longer just one on-sale date. In today's ticketing environment, you have to deal with pre-sale dates. In order to buy tickets before they go on sale to the general public, you need to find out the pre-sale code. The best way to keep track of all these dates and codes is to sign up for several newsletters. The newsletters you will need to sign up for include your local arena where the WWE holds their events, the newsletter on WWE.com, and the newsletter for the company that is in charge of handling tickets for your local arena. For most people, that will be Ticketmaster. Your credit cards might have deals with your local arenas as well, so make sure that you also sign up to be notified for cardholder events. There is a fallacy that the closer you are the better your seats are. That is not always the case. Ringside seats are a tricky deal. Since they all face forward, it is possible to have first-row seats with terrible sight angles. I find it is better to have a seat a few rows back rather than a "closer" seat that is close to the hockey boards. Ringside seats are also a bad idea if you have children or are short. Since many of the seats aren't elevated for a few sections, if you sit towards the back of one of these sections your view will be blocked. As far as sitting in the stands goes, the best seats for the event are those closest to center-ice or the mid-court line for a basketball game. However, that rule of thumb goes out the window if the ring isn't set up in the center of the arena. Check the layout of the arena before making your purchase to make sure that you know where the ring is located. In general, buying tickets in-person or over the phone is not the best way to get good seats. To get the tickets as soon as they go on sale, it's better to buy them on your computer. Have your credit card and mailing information set up on the Ticketmaster website. You only have a few minutes to complete your transaction on Ticketmaster and it would be horrible to lose great seats because you didn't get your info typed. Another suggestion is to have multiple browser windows open and keep refreshing them as the time for the pre-sale nears. You never know exactly when Ticketmaster will release tickets for the event and the sooner you are in the system, the better seats you will have. Don't buy tickets you are unhappy with unless there is a high-chance the event will sell out quickly. You still have several shots of nabbing great tickets. Check back in a few hours and for the next few days. If someone else messed up their billing information or their card was rejected, those seats go back on sale. If you're still unhappy, wait for the pre-sale to end and try again when tickets become available to the general public. The same rules apply as above and in the previous step. If you have followed these steps and still can't nab a great seat, you may still be in luck. These strategies may work: Check back with Ticketmaster the week of the show. Due to changes to the arena configuration and special comped promotional seats being returned, some great seats can become available as it gets closer to ring time. This strategy works in arenas that don't typically sell out TV Tapings. In this case, wait as long as possible to buy your tickets; you want to make sure you have some of the worst seats in the house -- not just a bad section, but in a really bad row, hopefully in a seat with only a partial view of the ring! On your way to the arena, hope that the show isn't a sell-out. If you are lucky, when you arrive you'll find a black tarp covering your seat. You will then receive a free upgrade! The reason this trick works is because the WWE doesn't like to show empty seats on its television shows.
